[Edaily Reporter Kim Young-hwan and Kim Se-yeon] "I have high expectations for COMEUP as it will be an opportunity to create synergy through networking."

The voices of startup representatives attending Korea's largest global startup event, "COMEUP 2024," were filled with anticipation. The event, which will be held for two days on the 11th and 12th under the theme of "Innovation Beyond Boundaries," will be the largest ever with startups and investors from 45 countries participating.

Hong Yun-taek, CEO of Spaceway, which is aiming to enter the US market, said, "In order to enter overseas markets, we need diverse talents, investors, and policy support from government agencies;" and expressed his expectations by saying, "It is very important to connect with interested investors like at the Come Up event"

Spaceway is a startup that designs spaces and supplies housing using an automated solution that combines artificial intelligence (AI) and architectural software BIM. It has signed memorandums of understanding with 11 foreign companies, and 7 of them are American

CEO Hong emphasized, "Poor construction is ultimately a result of human error," and "I thought that automating this would reduce uncertainty, so I thought of a business model based on an automation solution."

Orange Biomed, which possesses technology to monitor diabetes with a single drop of blood, is a Rocket League company that received Series A and B investments like Spaceway. Orange Biomed has received a total investment of 8.1 billion won. Park Ye-seul, CEO of Orange Biomed, was selected as one of the "30 Under 30" by Forbes Korea last year.

CEO Park said, "We are considering expanding globally with our original technology patents as Korean patents, so we have patent portfolios in the US, Europe, Japan, Korea, and China," and "We are focusing on the US market the most. We are currently undergoing clinical trials to obtain FDA approval." Participating in ComeUp for the first time this year, he expressed satisfaction, saying, "I will come again next year."

Mobawheel, which belongs to the Rookie League with less than 1 billion won in cumulative investment, is an early-stage startup that provides road information based on AI. CEO Kim Min-hyun of Mobawheel explained its business model by saying, "We measure road conditions in real time by installing sensors on cars to prevent all types of accidents that occur due to road conditions, such as black ice in winter and flooding in summer." He continued, "(By attending the ComeUp) I hope to create synergy through networking," and "I wish there were experts who could act as a mediator between start VCs, like a matchmaking company."

CEO Han Jong-won of Novaair is an aspiring entrepreneur. He is preparing to commercialize a solution that automatically diagnoses turbulence using AI and helps aircraft respond. The company is developing technology that uses vibration detection sensors installed on smartphones to determine the warning signs of turbulence as the aviation industry prepares countermeasures due to the increase in turbulence caused by serious climate change. CEO Han explained the reason for attending, saying, "While preparing for my startup, I thought that ComeUp would be an opportunity for me to learn and grow by listening to industry information and networking."
